

Before the FCC makes any major revisions to the media ownership rules we think that Congress and the public need more opportunity to review and comment on any changes. This subject has not been adequately covered by our current media, perhaps because they do not deem it to be in their best interest. Changes to the current media ownership rules should focus on promoting the FCC's stated goals of diversity, localism, and competition. Achieving these goals is essential to a fully functioning democratic society.